AIA Australia makes major strategic investment in group insurance capability

Melbourne, 28 January 2026. Leading life, health and wellbeing insurer AIA Australia has announced a series of key appointments and structural changes as it moves into a new chapter focused on investment in growth and partnerships in group insurance.

The changes will kick off a period of sustained investment into AIA Australia's group insurance offering, reflecting the insurer's long-term commitment to the superannuation industry and to improving member outcomes.

Shortly, AIA will announce its market-leading suite of group insurance propositions, with a strong focus on innovation and digital delivery, paired with AIA's long history of excellence in health and wellbeing.

Chris Healey has been appointed Chief Group Insurance Officer, leading AIA Australia's group insurance strategy and performance. Chris brings more than 20 years' experience across strategic, commercial and operational leadership roles in both the public and private sectors. He most recently held senior roles at life insurer TAL and has previously worked at Swiss Re and the Australian Taxation Office.

To support this new chapter, AIA Australia has also reshaped its group insurance structure, creating several new roles and teams aligned to growth, product and service excellence, and strong partner and member delivery.

Sujan Yamunarajan has been appointed Executive General Manager of Growth, leading a newly established division that brings together expertise in business development, product, pricing and tender propositions, to deliver tailored solutions that support future-focused super fund partnerships.

Emily Bridger has been appointed General Manager, Products and Propositions, who will work closely with super funds and employers to enhance AIA's group insurance product and service offerings to meet fund and member needs.

Peter Kelly has joined AIA Australia from TAL as Head of Tender Propositions – Growth. Peter brings more than 20 years' experience across group insurance, digital experience, marketing strategy and customer-focused growth.

Wayne Willis Davis also joins AIA Australia to lead the newly created Corporate team, where he will support the organisation's market-leading position in corporate partner relationships and engagement. Wayne was previously at Aware Super.

CEO of AIA Australia Damien Mu said, "At AIA, our dream is for Australia to be the healthiest and best protected nation in the world. We deeply value our partnerships with superannuation funds and recognise the vital role they play in safeguarding the futures of Australians.

"These changes to our group insurance leadership and the singular focus of each team strengthens our ability to deliver product excellence and strong member outcomes, enabling us to support more Australians to live healthier, longer and better lives."

Chris Healey said he was thrilled to join AIA Australia and was preparing for a strong first year with the company. "Our people are our greatest asset, and these announcements build on AIA Australia's
